Now, many people think that living in the countryside is inconvenient, but a while ago,

That may be true. This is because, due to the development of logistics and information infrastructure,

No matter where you are in Japan, we have created an environment where it is difficult to create a digital divide, and if you find what you want,

Search online and with one click, your daily groceries and other items will be delivered to your door within two days.

Daily necessities can be delivered the same day using the supermarket's online delivery service.

Payments and transfers can also be made through online banking, as well as various applications and communication with people far away experience, live-in volunteers, and part-time workers, planning, production, and sales of wheat craft "Himmeli", company through agricultural work Training acceptance projects, etc.

[Location] Shirataki, Engaru-cho, Monbetsu-gun, Hokkaido

[Area] Approximately 42 hectares (approximately the size of 9 Tokyo Domes)

[Crops] Potatoes, wheat, sweet corn, sugar beets, broccoli, etc.

Without such an environment, living in the countryside may have taken a lot of determination.

It may have required some hardship, but now that I'm living in the city,

I think you'll get almost the same level of convenience.

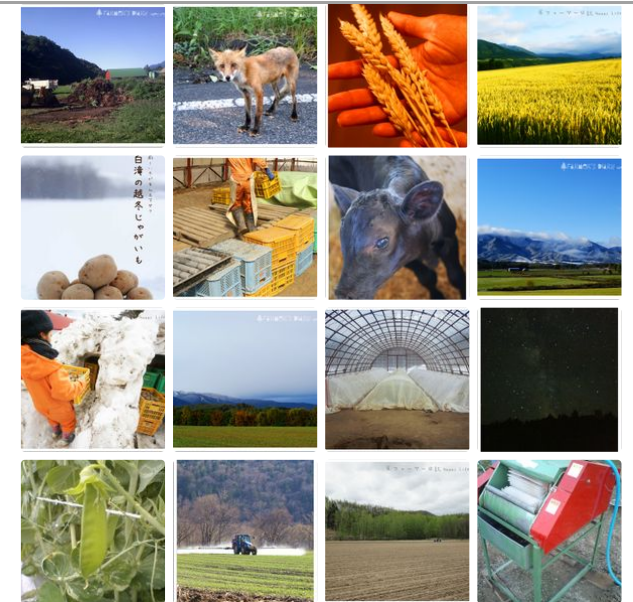

Of course, there are many inconveniences in some aspects, such as medical care and education.

However, the difference that inevitably emerges is the difference in the number of "encounters". overwhelming population

It goes without saying that we are different, but the first-hand information and various stimuli that can be obtained from encounters with people are

It is essential for improving daily motivation and starting new business.

Rural areas are at a disadvantage in that respect, so try to visit as many different places as possible.

I'm doing it. Everyone please come and visit Emen Farm ^^
