"One morning, Mom boiled molasses and maple sugar until it turned into a thick syrup, and Dad brought in two frying pans of beautiful white snow from outside. He gave one to Laura and Mary, Mom and Dad poured brown syrup onto the snow.Laura and Mary made circles, swirls, and twisty shapes with the syrup, which quickly clumped into candy. "On a cold winter day, the children draw pictures on the snow with syrup and make candy. daughter to put her to bed,she said, ``I'd like to try it someday." Let's make snow candy today! It snowed heavily, and everywhere was covered in fluffy fresh snow now. My daughter's daycare center is closed. I feel like I can spend some relaxing time while the guests at the guesthouse go skiing. Maybe today is the perfect day to imitate Laura's candy making style? When I proposed this to my daughter, she was very enthusiastic.

My live-in volunteer also said he was interested, so I decided to try making it right away.

We don't have maple sugar, but we make ``Tortoise candy'' with sugar made from the ``beet'' we grow, water, and vinegar. My daughter's idea was to add strawberry syrup to the shaved ice to create a slightly red candy. Made it outside on fresh snow ! I washed it clean and ate it. We live in Shirataki, Engaru Town, Hokkaido, where it snows from November to April. The temperature is of course below freezing throughout the winter, and there are days when it's so cold that it can get as low as -30 degrees Celsius, and your nose freezes when you breathe. I would like to continue to have fun experiences th
