My wife. Ezura Farm started operating as a farm guest house in earnest this year, but basically only accepts overnight stays during the agricultural off-season (winter). During the busy farming season from spring to autumn, the facility serves as a lodging facility for live-in workers (borabaite) (^ ^) Borabaite began accepting Borabaite the year after he became independent. In 2013, 4 people came and in 2014, 15 people came. Most of them are university students from Sapporo, but some come with their families. Most of the children stay for about a week, but some stay for up to four months in total, and some of them have become like family. *Click here for past experiences→ Voices from fellow Bora part-time workers	profile No Image Author:Ezura Farm [About us] Just before the age of 30, I ended my life as an office worker in Tokyo and moved to Hokkaido. ave a feeling that the number will increase considerably.

Someone is always at home...sometimes people ask me, ``Isn't it difficult?"

Of course, at first I was a little nervous and awkward about accepting people, and even now I still get a little nervous on the first day, wondering what kind of person they would be.

However, now I can have them participate in my daily life without giving them special hospitality.

They do the farm work with us, and we share the housework, so sometimes I even think it's easier when there's someone else around.

Above all, I enjoy having people come.

Mai-chan, who stayed with us for a month in May of this year, took photos of her many experiences, which we would like to introduce to you.

Mai-chan has the talent to enjoy anything, so please take a look at her fresh photos. (I wrote the explanation)

Welcome to Ezura Farm! A chair in front of the wood stove. I recommend reading the book here. Transplanting beets on a working machine. Pick up stones. Even though such large stones came out, they really did their best. Planting potato seeds. Mechanical work unique to large-scale field farming. rest space. Farm work is hard work, but taking a break outside feels good. Let's all make dinner together. Even boys are encouraged to participate ♪ Carrying firewood. In addition to farming, there are many other jobs related to daily life. Picking wild vegetables for a side dish for dinner. (Wild vegetables are limited to this time of year!) Making bread on a rainy day. When you stay for a long time, you have time to experience many things. During a break. The background music is the chirping of birds and the sound of the wind. Menu for one day. Sweet potato dumplings, freshly picked asparagus, and butterbur. I also made flower jelly. Tea party in the garden. Yakiniiku in the garden. Dyeing with flowers. There is a lot to play with depending on your ideas. Making dumplings with the mugwort that we collected. They also made a short movie (^ ^)

We are still recruiting volunteers this year.

In the photo, it looks like a ``relaxed" life, but it's probably more rural than I imagined, with no convenience stores or family restaurants (lol), and I'm prepared to be tired and have muscle pain all over my body from farm work. Please (lol)
